†7017. Carolus I. Britanniarum Rex. A Securi et Calamo Miltonii Vindicatus. [Motto & Ornament.] Dublini, Apud Liberum Correctorem, via Regia, sub signo Solutæ fascis. M.DC.LII. 8°. Hib. 8 . 652 . 4

With note inserted by Henry Bradshaw, showing that the book was printed in France, and written by a Frenchman.

'This imprint, "Dublini" is clearly false. The whole appearance of the title-page shows it to have been printed in France, before looking into the book. Once there, it is clear that the writer is a Frenchman. For one thing look at p. 32, where he speaks of the wretched state of his own country as compared with England even under Charles I. Besides this not as proofs, look at the lettering "Pro Rege Angliae," the bookplate, that of a French owner, and the price 1 franc 50 centimes marked in it.

'The leaf which contains the bookplate & is pasted down to the cover is the 8th leaf of sheet H, and if the book is rebound should be carefully kept joined to its other leaf. '14th January, 1862.' 'H. B.'

The book is by Claude Barthélemy Morisot, and is in answer to Milton's Eikonoklastes. Query printed in Dijon? See Didot, Biog. Nouv. Univ.

NOTES AND CORRIGENDA

HUMPHRY POWELL (1550).

Attention may be drawn to an interesting problem suggested by Mr. H. R. Plomer in The Library for January, 1910, pp. 54–72, as to the possibility of a connection between Hugh Singleton, the printer of several books with cryptic imprints, and Humphry Powell, during the reign of Queen Mary. He suggests that Singleton 'may have gone over to Ireland, taking with him a stock of foreign letters and initials, which he could easily have procured abroad' (p. 69). The two men are known to have been associated. If Mr. Plomer's theory is correct, then Ireland may claim among its typographical treasures some of the most interesting and most baffling books which were ever issued in the English language. For a biographical notice of Powell see E. G. Duff, A Century of the English Book Trade (London Bibliographical Society), 1905, p. 124; and for facsimiles see E. R. McC. Dix in R.I.A. Proceedings, vol. XXVIII. C., p. 213.
